The Secret

4 THE SECRET

Mom had a jar of emergency money tucked away in the cupboard. It had been there for so long that I knew she didn't remember it. I took my basketball fees from the jar. I planned to pay it back as soon as I could get to the bank, and I knew Mom wouldn't notice.

Then I needed Mom's signature on the forms. I practiced signing Mom's name on a blank paper several times before signing the form. Coach A was never going to question that signature. I did a good job.

The lunch meeting started right on schedule. All the girls were dropping off their permission forms on a small desk in front of Coach A. Most of the girls' parents had already sent an e-transfer for the fees, but some girls handed Coach A the cash. I added my signed forms to the top of the pile and gave her my forty dollars.

"Okay, I think we will get started," Coach A began. "I see we are all here, so let's start with what I expect of you. Number one — you must show commitment to this team if you want to play. You will attend all the practices — no excuses unless you are too ill to come to school. Do not plan birthdays and special events on practice days. You have the practice schedule for the whole season. I expect you to work around it. I also expect your full effort at every practice. We have twelve girls on this team. There are more who did not make the team and would be happy to take your place. At practice, we go hard so that we can play hard in the games. You will make every decision based on what is best for the team, not what's best for you. When one person messes up, the whole team accepts it. We will use mistakes to learn and grow. When one person has a great game, credit goes to the whole team. A team's strength is the ability of the team to work together, to take care of each other, to appreciate each other. Everybody good so far?"

We all nodded. We really just wanted to get our uniforms and schedules.

"I believe that on this team, you can learn everything really important in life — commitment, respect, teamwork and learning from mistakes."

Coach A paused. There was an awkward silence. I am not sure I believe that, I thought. But . . . can I please have my jersey?

"Okay," Coach A continued, clapping her hands in front of her. "I will be meeting with each of you over the next two weeks to talk about your role on the

"Do you need anything charged today?" my dad asked as he got ready to go into the office. He had power at work, so he could take my laptop to charge up if I wanted him to. But what was the point? I couldn't access my Google Classroom without Wi-Fi.

"No, I'm good," I said. "Are you going to buy batteries?"

"We had three camping lanterns and a radio, but my dad had forgotten to stock up on batteries for an emergency."

"I'll get some today. Hopefully. There might have been a run on them. I know it's almost impossible to find a generator these days."

Angelo wondered where the dog in the colourful sweater and boots was. They turned onto the driveway in front of the sprawling house with too many windows to count. The black BMW SUV with tinted windows was parked near the large garage doors.

Yvonne punched a code and the service door popped open. "Last chance, Angelo," she warned.

He shrugged. He followed her lead and removed his boots. "I didn't bring any homework to do," he said.

She threw an unpleasant look his way. "Homework? Really?"

Angelo stepped inside. The house with vaulted ceilings, marble floors, and pristine furniture was as intimidating as before. The only difference was that this time, he knew his way around.

They walked down the long hallway that opened into the large kitchen. Angelo was shocked to see the Queen herself. Mrs.

Harrington was standing there, waiting for them. Her son Jacob sat at the table.

Angelo took note that neither of them looked friendly or happy. He turned to Yvonne and said in Tagalog, "Why are we here? What's going on?"

Yvonne stood silently.

The Queen sat down, poured herself some steaming tea, and broke the silence. "Thank you for coming here." She uncrossed her hands. "We aren't coming out and accusing anyone just yet. Let's start this with just a simple question. Something has recently gone missing. Do you know anything about it?"

Angelo stared at her blankly.

The Queen made a rectangular shape in the air. "It's a hockey card."

Angelo recoiled inward, like he did when confronted with the volley of questions by mall security. Instead of a heavily ironed uniform and coffee in a white Styrofoam cup, the Queen wore shiny jewellery and was sipping tea out of La corriente eléctrica se mueve cuando los electrones libres de un átomo pasan al siguiente átomo. Para ver cómo funciona, arma una fila con tus amigos. Susurra una palabra a la persona que está a tu lado. Si todos susurran la palabra a la siguiente persona, la palabra llega hasta el final de la fila. La corriente eléctrica circula de la misma manera a lo largo de un cable. Los átomos del cable se quedan en su lugar mientras los electrones libres circulan de un átomo al otro.

Nadie se mueve de su lugar en la fila, pero la palabra que susurras pasa de una persona a la otra. Así se mueve la electricidad.
